

Make Sure You Visit These 5 Attractions When You're in Paris

By Metatrip Travel

- 1. Arc de Triomphe
 - This arc commemorates the soldiers who fought for France during the war. The arc, designed by Jean Chalgrin, stands at a height of 50 meters and is 22 meters wide. If you visit at night, you'll see the rekindling of the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.
- 2. Sainte-Chapelle
 - Enthusiasts of French art must visit Sainte-Chapelle. This structure is a representation of the Gothic style and is considered as one of the greatest achievements of the Rayonnant Age of Gothic architecture.
- 3. Notre Dame
 - Did you know that Notre Dame is the most visited monument in Paris? Aside from it being the setting to Victor Hugo's classic novel, Notre Dame continues to attract visitors because of its architectural features which make it distinct from earlier Romanesque architecture.
- 4. Louvre Museum
 - This is what art dreams are made of. Although the original plan for the Louvre was to actually be a fortress, the line of royals who have resided in the Louvre kept on expanding it until it became the 72,735sqm museum much loved by people from all around the world today.
- 5. Eiffel Tower
 - Gustave Eiffel built this for the 1889 Exposition Universelle to commemorate the 100th year anniversary of the French Revolution. It took a little over two years and two months to complete and you'll be surprised to know that the tower was intended to last only for 20 years. But scientific experiments attested to the significance of the tower which is why it remains a symbol of France up to this day.
